JASTRZAB-16

AT LAST...CONTRACEPTIVES THROUGH THE PRIVACY OF THE MAILS!

JASTRZAB, a journal of misfittings and postal Diplomacy (which is a game designed by Allan B. Calhamer who guarantees that your personalities will not be permanently warped if you play), comes to you from The Mighty Youngstown Nation semi-irregularly and is put together by S. Wrobel, 7 Poland Village Blvd., Poland, Ohio 44514 (216-7574140). Subscription rate: 10/$1.50; Game Fees: $5.00; No trades solicited.

IN THIS ISSUE SOMEWHERE: 1969B-Winter 1913, 1972EG-Fall 1902, 1972AK-Spring 1905, 1969BV-Spring 1910, 1973G-Winter 1901, 1972CM-Winter 1904, 1973AU-Spring 1901, 1972BQ-Spring 1904, 1972Dcx-sometime, another episode of Claud the Clod, another "Shaggy Polo" Tale--this one written by John Koning entitled "The Submarowboat", and our usual filler material, be it what it is.

DEADLINES FOR ALL GAMES: SATURDAY, APRIL TWENTY EIGHT, NINETEEN HUNDRED SEVENTY-THREE!!!!

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT: The Board of Directors of THE DIPLOMACY ASSOCIATION has not sanctioned a membership meeting at Diplo-Con VI in Chicago next June....John J. Beshara
Chairman of the Board

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT #2: The inhabitants of a section of Bydgoszcz, a city in northern Poland, found beer gushing from their water taps one morning last month. According to local officials, a faulty valve at a nearby brewery sent thousands of gallons of the beverage flushing into the city water mains....SAN JOSE NEWS

IGHIP--THE JOURNAL OF INTEREST GROUP HIGHLAND PARK--Mike Bartnikowski, 943 Stewart, Lir Park, Michigan 48146. Latest issue here (#7) contains the map and rules for STRESS-BATTLE FOR DETROIT, a Diplomacy-Type variant using a redistricted map of greater Detroit. Five players with three centers each, a victory criterion of 13 units, and no naval units or movement (which means Winsor is still safe). An interesting concept of a game. Should give rise to several other versions...the hills of San Francisco, Chicago (but who could fight in Chicago), and greater New York City! We can see Edi Birsan now...leading Bayonne and Secaucus in a fight against the Bronx and the Queens!!!!

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT #3: "There will be an open INTERNATIONAL DIPLOMACY MEETING Saturday night from 8pm on to about 12pm (AT THE DIPCON VI). I hope we don't need all that much time to rap, but in case we need it, it is there....EDI BIRSAN
PRESIDENT, IDA

-----ONE SIDE WON'T TALK AND THE OTHER SIDE WILL PROBABLY TALK TOO MUCH-----

A DROITE A GAUCHE (ADAG)--published by Hal Naus, 1011 Barrett Ave., Chula Vista, Calif, 92011 has two game opening up. One for novices and newer players, the second for anybody who would enter. Game fee of $4.00. Little press, no editorials, few frills, but a good place to play. Extremely reliable...in publication since 1966. Deadlines of three-four weeks. One of the first postal games we entered was 1971AL here. We many survive still.

TRADE ANNOUNCEMENT: By an error of omission (rather than commission), we inadvertently left off-off the Keeper of the Miller Numbers, one LEVIS PULSIPHER and his variant-orientated journal/zine, BLOOD AND IRON. Be it noted publicly that henceforth, the Keeper of the Miller Numbers, the Keeper of the Boardman Numbers, and the Prime Archivist will receive JASTRZAB by trade agreement. O.J., OK, LE'?

TOOTH AND NAIL....aaaah, something like that, anyhow...another of the Mensa-membered going around...built and published by Donald Horton, 16 Jordan Court, Sacramento, Calif. 95826. Subscription rate: 8/$1.00. MOLAR AND HANGNAIL??? Has opening in one game with long deadlines (for Don). $4.00 American. BICUSPID AND CLAW???? Don feeds squirrels as a hobby so you can expect so you should expect a nutty 'zine from thime to time...

UNDERLINED MOVES DO NOT SUCCEED. The Austrian Fleet Albania is ennihilated. The Russian Fleet North Sea is routed and must retreat to Belgium, Holland, Helgoland Bight, London, Yorkshire, or OTB. We will spend a couple of postcards then and inform the concerned countries of the direction of the retreat and save the mindbending task of conditional orders based on this retreat. Clear?

FRENCH ARMY COMMAND, MUNICH: Prime Minister Boyer discussed at a high ranking, end top secret conference with other high French officials the latest French military plans and portent decisions regarding to future use of Polish Soldiers. The General from Paris' training headquarters for the French National Army, General Petain, expressed his profound opinion that French armies should be made up of French nationals only and that all foreign troops should be expelled. Nevertheless, this extreme rightist attitude was compromised and resulted in allowing the Poles to form their own army in exile that would be funded and supplied directly from the French Supply Command. Prime Minister Boyer felt that an amicable compromised solution was reached and he declared himself in favor of using Polish troops in the planned offensive on Tyrolia, Austria. He expressed his desire, however, that the Polish troops be transferred to the German front as soon as possible. The consensus was that the Polish soldiers would help in the future assault on Warsaw, Poland in the near future.

THE LIGHT BLUE SOPWITH, OVER TYROLIA--French Ace Pierre Nylon fought in a tremendous aerial battle over Tyrolia versus a combined Russian-Austrian Squadron of assorted bi-planes and tri-planes captured from Germany. In a fierce dogfight, Pierre Nylon shot down his 23rd enemy plane while assisting two other French Sopwith Pilots in escaping from tenacious Austrian pilots. With only 15 planes versus the enemy's combined 31 planes, the French Air Squadron #1313 did exceedingly well. Of course, the latest French Sopwiths were far superior in climbing and speed and thus easily out-manuevered the enemy's inferior German-made Albatrosses and their own, slower still, home products. Having defeated the enemy, the French proceeded to bomb the front lines of the enemy near Tyrolia. A new system of contact was used in which flares from the infantry denoted their individual progress for the planes to return and report. In addition, reports were made for "ranging" the enemy artillery trained on the "no-mans land" in Tyrolia. By knocking out their guns, the offensive would be assured of success. Immediately afterwards, the 500,000 man attack hit Tyrolia with full force of the French Republic's National Armies in Piedmont and Munich along with support from the Italian Army Venice.

BATTLE REPORT--TYROLIA, SCENE TWO, TAKE TWO: After the Frenchies took the Poles out of the front lines, the other dummies didn't know where the fighting was and so we're still holdin' on to what we got and keepin' 'em back.....Major Mense, Commodore Austrian Army Corp.

SEVASTAPOL: Sure is nice here in the fall, by gosh. I'm glad we talked the emperor into coming here for a vacation instead of invading some really tacky place like Asbury Park or Atlantic City. Of couree, if we had gone there, we could always have lost and then become rich soaking the U.S. for Marshall Plan monsy. But this way, it might even work out bettsr. If we can get to the Czar's fortune before he has it shipped to Zurich (that's about 20KM inside Impassebils), we could just buy the whole American Atlantic Coast and pick and choose.

Very soon now her patience and feminine mystiquis could give way to one hell of a mad broad--who wsa as big as a grizzly and twice sa tough! Claud Ooopoopowski was tsrrified that she would kill him in a final slephant charge at the iron bars that incarcerationd them!

Finally their leywer, Abe Goldbergstein, got one of them frse. After all, the charge was s minor one and the Supreme Court would not allow eny of this hold-without-bail jazz--

SUBMAROWBOATSKI

WEAPONS THAT DIDN'T CHANGE THE WORLD: THE SUBMAROWBOAT

THE Submarowboat pictured above is but one of the series of submersible craft that sprang from the fertile imagination and imperfect engineering genius of the Polish naval expert Count Wladislaw Whop.

WHOP was a pioneer in the field of undersea craft, and actually predated the German and American use of submarines. He studied the work of the American designer Holland, and apparently learned nothing from it.

WHOP worked out of a factory on the Baltic coast, rented from an obliging Prussian government who believed he was building a type of automatic pinsetter with which he would revolutionize the culture of his native land.

HIS first ship, the Mark I, was a totally enclosed craft not unlike modern submarines except that it had no means of propulsion. Whop planned that the crew would be welded into the ship and then a large group of workers would give it an energetic push toward whatever foreign land it was to reach. This proposal received a less than enthusiastic response from both the High Command and the crew, and was abandoned after a few months.

UNDAUNTED, Whop evidenced his faith in the future of undersea craft by designing the Mark II. This vessel overcame the lack of propulsion by the simple means of drilling many holes in the bottom of the ship. The crew stuck their legs through these holes and paddled vigorously, allowing the Mark II to achieve a reasonable though somewhat awkward motion.

A FASTER version of the ship was soon forthcoming, and nearly a dozen were built and launched simultaneously. These Mark III's had additional holes along the sides through which the crew stuck their arms and, by means of strong strokes, pushed the ship forward at a much greater speed. The Mark III had several problems. The crewmen could never remember which arm they were to stick through, "right" and "left" not yet having been invented in Poland, and some crewmen would invariably position themselves backwards, impeding the ship's progress. Whop's solution was to crew the Mark II with one armed man, but these were difficult to find and the draft-board's recruiting efforts were soon condemned as being inhumane and crude.

A MORE serious drawback was the ease with which water entered the armholes. The leakiness of the Mark III made it excellent for descents but difficult for resurfacing. None of the dozen Mark III's returned from its maiden voyage.

THE vessel pictured here is actually a Mark IV, or Submarowboat, which was the most successful of Whop's designs. Oars protruded through holes fitted with ingenious cork stoppers that prevented the entrance of water, and enabled the Submarowboat to achieve heretofore undreamed of speeds, allowing it for the first time to travel in a direction other than that of the prevailing current.

THE launching of a large fleet of Submarowboats was treated with great enthusiasm by the Warsaw papers. The Warsaw Grubb, knowing however that the majority of its readers had ever seen any body of water even as large as a bathtubful and would therefore be unlikely to understand the principles of submarine warfare, heralded the launching with a story which translated the weapon into terms they could comprehend. Headline "Terror From The Sky," the story featured a dramatic illustration by a staff artist which blithly showed the Submarowboat being rowed through a cloudy sky while fighting with what was either a large dirigible or a very athletic whale.

THE only problem with the Submarowboat was the need for precision in rowing, since the oarsman out of time with his comrades would cause disastrous oar tangling. The size of the Submarowboat fleet was limited by the shortage of men skilled in leading the oarsmen in the rowing chant, which required the leader to count to two.

A LATER version of the ship, the Mark V or Submasterwheelor, had a paddlewheel affixed to the stern. This model proved impractical when submerged, however, since water ran down the steam stacks.

WHOP'S final version strove to combine offensive capability with propulsion. Installing torpedoes on his ships for the first time, the Count--always a practical man--reasoned that propulsion could be obtained by firing the torpedoes out the stern. All but one of his Mark VI's were destroyed by explosions when, arrayed in a mathematically perfect straight line--the only formation understood by the Count--they all attempted to commence movement at once.

FOLLOWING this disaster, Whop hastily emigrated to the United States. He was unheard from until nearly half a century later when he made his final appearance as the designer of the Chevrolet Corvair.

SPECIAL REPORT: OTHER GAMES:

Some of you might be interested in knowing how your humble narrator fares in his battles against the nefarious Hopewell Hopeless in the one-on-one LORD OF THE RINGS GAMES we are now engaged in. The best gauge for this game is a comparison of relative number of pieces and their respective strengths. For example, in 1972Dcx, Mordor has (or probably will have) 13 pieces with a strike force of 20. The free people have 22 pieces with a force of 26. This after 4 game years. Now then, in the twin LORD games: the first, where your humble whatever is good guy, Mordor has 12 pieces with a force of 20 against the Hopeless of 22 pieces with a force of 27. The second game: Birsauron has 14 pieces with a force of 22 against my 19 pieces with a force of 23! Conclusions---Birsauron starts quickly, but the games aren't over with yet! It is safe to say that I haven't given up in the first game nor in the second, but the battles are uphill. THAT'LL teach me not to try and anticipate Birsauron as doing something or other and play the game fairly without second guessing.

The other type of game in which we are presently engaged in death-lock with Birsauron is a mock battle within the scope of SPACE CENTURIONS. Equal cost forces, but different strike capabilities. Edi has publicly admitted in the ARENA that two out of three isn't bad, so readers may conclude that his chances of victory here are rather slim. As in the mini-tank battles, we have demonstrated an ability to outshoot him repeatedly. Now if we could only figure out how to get cannons into the Middle Earth games....

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE YOUNGSTOWN VARIANT.

The original Youngstown Variant was designed here (as the name indicated) by one Jack Tucker who never played postal Diplomacy. Long since then forgotten, it has not been played in person nor even mentioned. As the original version did not have the OBB boxes (which were added by Rod Walker), travel around the world was impossible. Hence the games played here either stalemated in the middle of Russia in an East-West confrontation, or the new powers triumphed. Only about three or four face-to-face games were contested here before the game dropped out of favor. Some have asked why the Americas were not included to make the game truly world-wide. One of the obscure reasons that I was able to dig out of Koning was the fact that Tucker (who always operated on a grand scale) made the original map as large as a full-size bed with the accompanying problems of storage and transportation. Must have been before King-size beds came into vogue...or wather beds...

GARLAND: I feel I owe you all an apology for missing the last move, plus an explanation. You see, I tried no less than three times to mail in my orders, but all to no avail. The first time I attempted, I merely stopped off at the local P.O. to drop off the letter, when suddenly from behind a bush sprang out a short (about 5'8") funny-lloing guy. He was balding on top, wearing a long black cape, and had so many rings that he apparently thought he was either Fu Manchu or Ringo Starr. Anyway, he grabbed my letter, yelled, "Die, Gondor swine!!", and ran off in the direction of Ithilien.

I went back to the P.O. the next day, and I thought I made it when nine shady characters in black T.H.E. CAT suits jumped me, pulled me into a dark alley, and quoted Eric Just and Conrad von Metzke limericks at me. Shortly after I regained my senses. I discovered hat once again I had lost my move.

Finally, in desperation, I went to a mail box! Making sure that no one was around, I quickly dropped my letter in and congratulated myself on outwitting what's-his-name. However, as I walked off, I thought I heard snickering coming from inside the box. Apparently it was so, and I was bocu-ha-had. ((SHOULD HAVE HAD YOUR MOVES BONDED!))

PARIS (1 September 1912) President Davis, who will soon be retiring from his post after 12 long years, stated that he was looking forward to the endof the war before his term expired. "We are ready to sit down at the Conference table in the Hotel Majestic," he stated. "All we ask is a cease fire along present lines, with all Powers holding territory that they possess as of that date." He announced that the Italian people had voted to join their French brothers in an enlarged Republic, and he hoped that the residents of Alsace, Swabia, and Bavaria would also voluntarily join. The French Government also praised the Austrian Government for its cooperation in the war.

As the war appeared to be grinding to a halt, final promotions were being announced. Additional stars were given to both Marshall Ferdinand Foch and Admiral Mal de Mer, while in an unusual ceremony at the Cathedral of Notre Dame, Charles De Gaulle was promoted to Lt. Colonel while he posed in front of the statue of Joan of Arc.

SOMEWHERE ELSE

pretty soon they would be joining the cops for invading the burglar's civil right to kill someone shooting at them--but I digress....

So Lois, accused rapist of two people, was set free and bond for Claud's napkin caper was set at $17,542.98. "He's a criminal that shouldn't be let free" said Superior Court Judge Dick Hillmouse Nickon.

Once on the street Batty Woman ran to the nearest soda fountain and drained it in hour. She was on here third ice cream parlor ordering "30 scoops of ice cream, and don't crush the nuts" when someone tried to hold up the 2nd National Bank across the street--again! Lois finished her sundae while the police and robbers engaged in a pitched gun battle in which 17 were slain and 93 wounded ((in the knee?)). She finally got aroused when a stray bullet hit the 2 gallon Coke bottle she had up to her pudgy lips!

She pried herself from behind the counter and ran into the street....
(TUNE IN NEXT TIME TO HEAR CLAUD SAY: "BUT I DIDN'T STEAL THE NAPKIN, YOUR HONOR, DON'T HANG ME!!!!))
